

Alien Invasive Plants - A Threat to Your Woodlot

An alien invasive plant is one that has been moved from its native habitat, usually from an out of country location for garden / domestic use, and then reproduces so aggressively that it 'escapes' into native plant communities. In a forest ecosystem, an invasive plant can be a tree, shrub, or herbaceous plant. Some particularly persistent alien invasive plant species now appearing in Ontario woodlots and other natural areas include; Common and Glossy Buckthorn (Rhamnus cathartica), Swallowwort / Dog-Strangling Vine (Vincetoxicum nigrum and V. rossicum), Garlic Mustard (Alliaria petiolata), and Norway maple (Acer platanoides).

Most imported plants are unable to reproduce or survive without help. Unfortunately, some alien invasive plants can successfully compete and dominate in certain native habitats. It has been reported that approximately 700 species (27% of the total flora!!) growing in Ontario are non-native. To date, most alien plants have been transported into Canada from Europe and Asia. One of the biggest factors contributing to the success of certain alien invasive plants is the fact that no natural control exists for that plant. In a plant's native habitat, natural controls such as climate, animals, insects, fungi, and other plants restrict them to a certain habitat niche within their range. Alien invasive plant species have the potential to displace natural vegetation such as woodland trilliums or the natural regeneration of forest tree species. If the habitat is very unique or rare, some flora and fauna may become locally endangered.

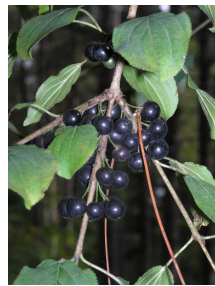

To be safe, strive to plant only native perennials in your garden. Be wary of purchasing specimens from nurseries that are advertised as suited to our climate range and 'easy to grow'. For more information on alien invasive plant species, consult with your local Stewardship Council or type in the name of the plant you are researching at an Internet site – abundant information is available. Watch out for these alien invasive shown below, they may be in your favorite forest already.
